

Abstract

A device for driving assistance is described including an output unit for outputting driving instructions to a driver, in particular for parking into a parking space in which the driving instructions provide the driver with a driving zone situated between two trajectories inside which the driver may freely select a path into the parking space. He/she does not have to follow a single predefined ideal line, but still has the safety of not having to take a collision risk.

(Figure 2)